Twenty-five pre-doctoral students at Cal State, San Bernardino will receive financial boosts from an $800,000, four-year National Medical Student Achievement Program grant.

The new program, which is being coordinated by the Graduate Studies Office, will target low-income African-American and Latino students. Administrators are selecting from a pool of juniors and seniors currently enrolled at Cal State and from juniors who are transferring from one of the four, local community colleges. “African-Americans and Latino students are severely underrepresented in careers where a doctorate is a prerequisite,” says the original proposal submitted by Cal State.

The California State University system has many doctoral incentive programs in place, but more resources still are needed to attract candidates from all racial backgrounds. The program also will offer tutoring, academic counseling, faculty mentoring, specialty trips and a summer research internship.

COUNSELING, RESEARCH CENTERS REOPEN

With the arrival of the new school year the campus’s Community Counseling Center and the newly established Marketing Research Center have reopened.

The counseling center offers affordable and confidential help with issues such as depression, eating disorders, self-esteem and for handling major life changes, or for those who simply want to grow personally.

The once-a-week counseling sessions are conducted by qualified Cal State graduate students, who work under the supervision of Psychology Department faculty. Edward Teyber, a Cal State professor of psychology, serves as the center’s director.

A $10 consulting fee is optional or charged on a sliding-scale basis. Each session is 50-minutes.

The center focuses on counseling for individuals, child, family and couples counseling is not available. Day or evening appointments may be scheduled.

While the center does not treat drug or alcohol addiction or those who may be suicidal, referrals can be made in such cases.

For more information call the Community Counseling Center at Ext. 5569.

The Marketing Resource and Learning Facility at Cal State reopened Oct. 3, offering its materials, including recently acquired donations, to the business community as well as students.

New contributions include point-of-purchase creative displays, worth $500, donated by H. King & Associates of Chicago; a $50 contribution from Sgro Promos Associates of San Francisco toward a permanent VCR and monitor for the facility; and press kits, valued at $50, from Peter Manning, a recent business graduate.

The center, housed in Jack Brown Hall, Room 283, the resource facility offers “concept boards and actual advertisements from area agencies, packaging and display material, merchandising training manuals and aids, graphic design materials as well as a host of statistical data books,” notes Victoria Sato (Marketing), who established the center.

Other corporations that have made the facility possible are JIC Penney, Sawary Holt Advertising, McMenigle & Spooner, TCI Cable Advertising, WestCoast Packaging, Inc., and Jeff Labbe Studios. The center is open Tuesdays and Wednesdays from 2-4 p.m. More information is available from Sato at Ext. 5753.

The boundaries between “soft” and “hard” geometries are explored in the University Art Gallery’s first exhibit of the year opening Oct. 19.

In “Neo-structuralism” the works of several artists look at how machines blur the distinctions separating man-made and natural forms. The show is being co-curated by the Art Department’s Richard Johnston and Elan Borenstain of the Boritzer Gray Hanano Gallery in Santa Monica. It runs through Nov. 22.

A week before the show, on Oct. 12, paintings long considered casualties of World War II will be shown in a slide presentation called “Hidden Treasures—A repository of artworks from German collections in temporary storage during World War II, some to be seen in Oct. 12 slide show at Yasuda Center.”

STRATEGIES, DIVERSITY DOMINATE RETREAT

Mental exercises to stimulate the thinking of campus managers and department chairs on issues of strategic planning and diversity were the order of the day at a leadership retreat Sept. 15. The ideas are being incorporated into the work of the Strategic Planning Steering Council and the University Diversity Committee.

The strategic planning exercise had participants count the university’s “stakeholders”—any person, group, organization or entity inside or outside CSUSB—that have shown interest in seeing the university survive and thrive organizationally.

Then participants brainstormed the expectations these stakeholders might have of the university’s performance. They also were asked to list university functions that might address stakeholders’ concerns.

The data will be used to guide the council’s development of subcommittees. These groups will study the university’s performance in various areas in greater detail.

Followings a presentation of data from the Student Needs and Priorities Survey and written comments from the Diversity Questionnaire, members of the leadership retreat were asked, “What could be done to improve diversity and campus climate?”

Ideas for future meetings on this topic were collected, and retreaters expressed some lingering questions on their minds regarding diversity. Responses were recorded and facilitated by Carol Ennis, a former UCR professor who is well known for his work on diversity issues.
